The History of Japanese Gardens

By Professor Masao Fukuhara

Wednesday 13 September 2006 7:00 pm

The Lecture is a must for all those interested in Japanese Gardens and will include:

A Brief History of Japanese gardens (from the Asuka (593-710 A.D.) to the Meiji (1868~1912) Periods), Japanese Garden Styles (Pond and Stream; Dry Stone; Tea Garden) as well as many of the elements making up a Japanese Garden such as Stone Arrangements, Plants and Trees, and Artefacts (lanterns, water basins, bamboo fences and so on).

Professor Masao Fukuhara is Professor at the Osaka University of Arts and has worked on the design, planning and overseeing of Japanese gardens at home in Japan and throughout the world, as well as working on the restoration of some of the ancient and traditional gardens of Japan.

His design and construction of different styles of Japanese gardens together with various restoration works abroad have contributed greatly to the understanding of the styles and techniques of Japanese gardens.

Some of the projects he has been responsible for in the UK include the Japanese landscape at the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew, the design and restoration of the Japanese Garden at Tatton Park, design of the Japanese Garden for Japan 2001 at the Chelsea Flower Show, (which won Gold and was awarded 'Best in Show'), and the redesign of the Rock Garden at RHS Wisley.

He currently lectures on the history of Japanese and Oriental gardens at the Osaka University of Arts, and also holds seminars on gardens and practical training on environmental planning. In addition he is a consultant for the Organisation for Landscape & Urban Greenery Technology Development, and is the official consultant to Osaka Prefecture Association for Parks and Urban Greening.
